Next time you stop by the meat department at Murphy's Market in Cutten, give a big hello and maybe a "congratulations" to Dennis Ryan.

Dennis has been a proud part of the Murphy's Markets team since 2017, bringing nearly eight years of experience and a lifelong love for Humboldt County to his work. Born and raised locally, Dennis started out in the Trinidad store working the barbecue and quickly became a versatile team member, lending his skills across all five Murphy's locations.

Most of his time has been spent in the meat department, but Dennis also enjoyed a summer helping out in the Trinidad deli. He values the opportunity to work in different stores, getting to know the unique flow and customer base of each. "Every store is a little different," he says, "and that's been a great learning experience."

What Dennis appreciates most about Murphy's is the relaxed, friendly work culture. "There's not a lot of pressure," he says. "Everyone treats each other with kindness and respect." He especially enjoys meeting new people—particularly during the busy summer season in Trinidad, where tourists from all over the world stop in.

Whether he's crafting a perfect sandwich or cutting a custom ribeye, Dennis takes pride in his work. "I appreciate all our customers," he says. "It's a pleasure dealing with everybody."

The Real Cost of Eggs

By Thadeus Greenson, Jennifer Fumiko Cahill and Kimberly Wear
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

In the runup to the November election, eggs took on an almost mythical status, their price tags acting as both a kind of poster for the Trump campaign and a symbol for Democrats' perceived inability to speak directly to inflation, the issue we were told most concerned voters.

In the election's final days, the average retail price of a dozen eggs was $3.65, according to the Federal Bank of St. Louis.

A majority of voters, polls showed, identified Trump as the candidate they most trusted to guide the U.S. economy. Meanwhile, polls showed many felt fears espoused by his critics — that he would overstep the bounds of his presidency, act as a dictator, violate rights and reason while carrying out his promise to deport millions of undocumented residents, and surround himself with both incompetent sycophants and conflicts of interest — were overblown.

Well, Trump entered the 100th day of his second term as the Journal went to press April 29. Let's take stock.

By all measures, Trump is cratering the economy he was entrusted to guide. His across-the-board tariffs, rolled out in trademark haphazard fashion, have upended the global economy. The S&P 500 is down almost 8 percent and has shed nearly $4 trillion in market value, wreaking havoc on pension funds and retirement investments, while economists everywhere predict consumer prices will spike.

The U.S. auto industry, which Trump had vowed to protect and bolster, is caught in chaos, facing tariffs on the 60 percent of its parts that are imported as his efforts to stymie electric vehicle production and unwind climate crisis policies are discouraging clean energy investment. American companies have already abandoned more than $6 billion in battery manufacturing projects, including a $1.2 billion factory in Arizona and another valued at $1 billion in Georgia.

Trump, despite Republicans holding a majority in both houses of Congress, has issued more than 140 executive orders, a record, with many attempting to stand in for the law-making and appropriations authorities the Constitution vests in Congress. In the case of the executive order attempting to nullify birthright citizenship, he is trying to nullify a constitutional amendment. Courts have already paused scores of these orders, deeming them illegal and/or unconstitutional.

His legally dubious Department of Government Efficiency, meanwhile, has created chaos in the federal government, nullifying grants for everything from fire prevention projects to cancer research, and gutting federal agencies. (While using dubious accounting and acting in opacity, it has also fallen woefully short of its stated savings goals, lowering its cut target from $2 trillion to $1 trillion and now $150 billion.)

And the deportation effort we were assured would initially target violent undocumented criminals has cast a predictably wide net, deporting more people without criminal records than with, according to scores of reports. Trump has gleefully (given the tone of his social media posts) deported people to a notorious El Salvadorian prison without due process and seemingly in direct violation of a court order. Immigration and Customs Enforcement has deported multiple people here on legal student visas because the administration didn't like how they exercised their free speech rights. And in perhaps the most egregious case — well, other than the administration's apparent defiance of a U.S. Supreme Court's order to "facilitate" another deportee's return — the administration deported a 2-year-old U.S. citizen over her father's objections after her mother reportedly attended a "routine check-in" with ICE. The toddler was deported, in the words of a judge Trump appointed during his first term, with "no meaningful process."

In these first 100 days, Trump has also gutted Diversity Equity and Inclusion programs, tried to legally erase the very existence of transgender people, attempted to bully universities across the country, pardoned some 1,500 Jan. 6 defendants, including those who violently assaulted police officers, promoted his family's crypto business in what experts call the greatest conflict of interest of the presidency, acted as an apologist for Russia's invasion of Ukraine and seen more than 2,000 Palestinians killed by Israeli forces in an ongoing war he'd promised end on Day 1 of his presidency. Speaking of Day 1 promises, Trump pledged to end inflation immediately but it was up 2.4 percent in March.

All this reasonably leads one to ask, what's the real price of eggs? As of March 1, the average price of a dozen was $6.28, which doesn't include the cost of our nation's soul. ●

‘Better Ways to Own the Libs’

Editor:
Thank you for the article about the demonstration in Eureka (“If Only We’d Done More to Save Her,” April 24). There are, indeed, lots of things to be concerned about lately.

The top of my list is habeas corpus. Per the American Heritage Dictionary: “A writ to bring a person before a court or a judge, most frequently used to ensure that a person’s imprisonment, detention or commitment is legal.” We have people unlawfully imprisoned, and we have people “disappeared” to El Salvador from whence it seems rather cumbersome to appear for an immigration hearing. Mohsen Mahdawi, the green card holder who showed up for his naturalization appointment and was whisked away, really took the prize in my estimation. Egregious is too mild a word. At least he is still in the United States. Suppose he could take his citizenship test in jail? Suppose being a citizen would make a difference?

So, due to the feeling that it was necessary to show up and do something, I was at the demonstration. And the Dodge Charger mentioned toward the end of the article — it was dark blue — out of which the “angry man” emerged at the stoplight in front of the courthouse, was of particular interest to me. Just previously, that car had nearly run me over in the crosswalk as I crossed Fifth Street on the walk signal. Were I a bit less spry for my age, I would be in the hospital now, at best. But I jump fast. As the car in the right turn lane on I Street was patiently waiting for people to cross, the blue car — appropriate that it was a “Charger” — charged from the center lane heading north on I, and gunned it into the crosswalk, heading east on Fifth Street. The driver deserves a ticket for an illegal and unsafe right turn. At least. Just my opinion. And driver, if you happen to read this, there are better ways to own the libs than vehicular homicide.

Fear and Frustration in Manila

Residents decry proposal to house a convicted serial rapist in their community

By Kimberly Wear

kim@northcoastjournal.com

Editor's note: Be advised, this story covers violent sexual assaults and may be disturbing to readers.

During a standing-room-only town hall at the Manila Community Resource Center on Monday, residents voiced fears and frustrations about a proposal to house a man legally deemed a sexually violent predator at a single-family residence in the small town while he's on conditional release from a state hospital.

Dubbed the "Ski Mask Rapist," Richard Stobaugh was convicted of a series of rapes, home invasions and assaults in the region during the 1980s, and suspected in others, including one case never prosecuted because the victim was too traumatized to testify and later died by suicide, according to court documents.

"I think it's important to recognize this would never happen in a neighborhood where there was more money," one resident said.

Several others pointed to Manila's relatively isolated setting, with narrow roads and no streetlights, noting how the proposed location on the 2100 block of Peninsula Drive has easy access not only to the bay, but a vast expanse of dune and forested areas, and by extension the homes of people who live there.

Residents also raised questions about how quickly law enforcement could respond if there was an issue with compliance and how Stobaugh would be monitored.

"I'm just trying to imagine riding by there with my kids," said one person who lives nearby. "Are we just taking it into our own hands? 'Hey, he's walking down the street, neighbor.'"

At the onset, Humboldt County Third

District Supervisor Mike Wilson, who facilitated the discussion with a panel including Sheriff William Honsal, District Attorney Stacey Eads and District Attorney's Office Chief Investigator Kyla Baxley, noted the meeting was about giving local residents information on "how to best advocate for yourselves as individuals and as a community in this process."

Repeatedly, they urged those attending to officially voice their concerns by sending emails or letters to the sheriff's office and the DA's office, saying the messages will be submitted to the court as part of the case record.

In those correspondences, Eads said it would be "really helpful" for people to include details about why they believe the proposed placement isn't appropriate and how they would be personally impacted if it's approved.

"The judge can really hold onto those when making their deliberations," she said.

Wilson echoed those remarks, saying, "sharing those anxieties that are real are a part of it, part of the story, and that's important to share."

"Go straight to the heart of how you feel ... and do it sooner rather than later," he said.

The panelists also encouraged those concerned to attend Stobaugh's upcoming community placement hearing scheduled for May 7 at 10:15 a.m. in Courtroom One of the Humboldt County Courthouse.

While local residents have been given the opportunity to speak during similar hearings in the past, Eads said that will be up to the judge in this case. However, her office "will advocate to the court that you have that opportunity."

This issue at hand that day, the officials stressed, will not be the question of whether Stobaugh should be released — that decision was made by Humboldt County Superior Court Judge Caleb Cockrum Dec. 4 — but whether the proposal to place him at the home in Manila is appropriate.

“What’s on the table right now is his relocation to this community and we need to focus on that,” said Honsal, who publicly opposed Stobaugh’s release in a recent letter to the community, noting his diagnosis as “someone who derives sexual gratification from inflicting pain and psychological suffering on his victims” and echoing state psychologists’ description of him as a “sexually sadistic” predator.

Honsal reiterated that stance during the meeting, saying, “This is a bad, bad guy. This is the boogeyman.”

For reasons that aren’t explained in the public record, Cockrum granted Stobaugh’s petition for a conditional release back to Humboldt County from Coalinga State Hospital, where he had been involuntarily committed more than a decade ago after being deemed a sexually violent predator under a civil process dictated by state law.

Court minutes from the three-hour hearing indicate the petition was granted “for reasons as stated on the record” but do not specify what those reasons were.

Eads told attendees the decision was made over objections from her office but was not appealable, saying her concern was Stobaugh’s offense history and number of victims, noting how he almost always wore a mask and almost always used weapons in committing his crimes.

“These were very, very heinous rapes,” she said.

Before being transferred to the state hospital, Stobaugh served 24 years in prison after pleading guilty in 1988 to six felony counts of kidnapping and rape by force, including the rape by force of a woman who was seven months pregnant on Jan. 27, 1988, and the rape by force of a 71-year-old woman Feb. 20, 1988, as well as three special allegations.

Eads emphasized those crimes were committed following his parole in 1987 after he served five years in prison for the rape of an 18-year-old Humboldt State University student in her dorm room at knifepoint in 1981.

Attorneys for Stobaugh argued in the petition for his release that the rapes he committed were not premeditated but rather crimes of opportunity driven by his methamphetamine addiction. Now sober and entering in his 70s, they said, he poses minimal risk of reoffending.

Regardless of his age, Eads said she’s very concerned about Stobaugh’s risk of committing crimes if he’s released.

“When he is outside of a controlled environment, this is what he does,” she said. “My worry is he will have another victim.”

Cockrum’s order requires that Stobaugh be placed in a one-year conditional release program that will include monitoring.

In response to a question about what Stobaugh’s conditional release would entail, Eads said that was largely dependent on the plan Liberty Healthcare Co. puts in place. So far, she said, the company, which has a state contract to supervise placements like Stobaugh’s, has offered little in the way of specifics about many of the concerns being raised that night, including how Stobaugh would be monitored and the issue of response times.

What Liberty has provided to her office, Eads said, provides only “vague terms” regarding what guidelines Stobaugh would be required to follow and no real information about what treatment or programs he would need to participate in following a release.

"One of the challenges we have right now ... is there really isn't a good plan," she said, adding later that, in theory, conditional release is "supposed to be a higher level of supervision."

Baxley said she was part of the team of investigators that went door-to-door to talk with residents in Manila during the DA's Office preparation for the hearing after Liberty proposed the Peninsula Drive location. The chief investigator said she believes the site assessment done by the company was not an "accurate representation of the community," including the home's proximity to daycares, parks and the miniature golf course.

She said the proposed placement site is "not appropriate," in her opinion.

"I'm going to work my hardest to show the court ... he does not belong in our community," Baxley said.

On the issue of law enforcement response times, Honsal noted it is an important one for residents to point out to the judge, along with the area's spotty cell phone service and vulnerability to power outages, all of which could impact any monitoring efforts.

"If he's out of compliance, if he's doing something suspicious, if he's out prowling around, it might take us time to get there," Honsal said, noting the average response time for calls in Manila is 16 minutes with deputies stretched thin across the region.

If Stobaugh is placed in Manila, Honsal said the area will "become one of our patrol locations" and a "number one problem house to look at, as deputies have time to check."

One of the residents at the meeting said the house in question has three bedrooms and asked if that meant other offenders could be placed there, as well, "creating a bigger picture problem."

"I don't think that concern of yours is without merit," Eads said, noting she's seen cases where a previous placement was used as premise for proposing additional ones at the same location or in its vicinity.

Honsal agreed. "Once they have something established, it's game on," he said. "That's another reason to oppose this."

Residents also noted the home in question is owned by people who live in Southern California and wondered if it would be worthwhile to lobby them to change their minds about leasing to Liberty.

"We can't advocate for you to do anything" in that vein, Honsal answered, cautioning anyone considering trying to reach out to the owners not to make threats and not to take any action against the property itself.

He noted that there is a lot of money behind the programs that house sexually violent predators and people who rent their properties to placement services like Liberty "can ask three to four times the rent."

An April 30 trial readiness conference was set to take place after this edition of the Journal went to print, with Eads saying at the meeting there was a possibility the May 7 court date could change. She also said she would bring up the suggestion of allowing residents to express their concerns to the court remotely, if they are unable to attend in person.

"I'm not sure the court will allow it but we'll ask," she said.

Honsal noted that if anything were to change on the hearing's schedule, officials will do their best to keep the community informed.

To date, he said, his office has already forwarded more than 130 letters and emails to the DA's Office, which has also received its own share to present to the court. Honsal and Eads both said there is still time for people to add to that number.

"On May 6th, we will print them out that evening and walk them into court" the next day, Eads said.

Wilson said the board of supervisors was slated to consider a letter of opposition to Stobaugh's placement in Manila at its May 6 meeting, but emphasized that what really matters is the stories of the residents whose lives will be directly impacted, noting, "it's just more moving to the judge."

"The gist of this is get your letters in and show up if you can [at the court hearing]," Wilson said. "It's important to have your voices in there." ●

Fair Association Continues Push for Race Dates, Holds Moment of Silence for Longtime Member

The Humboldt County Fair Association reiterated its intent to again apply for horse racing dates during the August fair from a state board next month, despite a tightening timeline and a host of uncertainties.

During a report from the association's Racing Committee at its April 28 board meeting, committee Chair Greg Gomes said he's "trying anything and everything possible to drum up support" for the association's application, which was on the wrong side of a 3-2 vote, failing to get the four votes necessary for approval from the California Horse Racing Board (CHRB) last month. Gomes and Board President Andy Titus indicated they are now preparing to present a business plan and a contract with the newly formed Bernal Park Racing, LLC, when they again lobby the CHRB for race dates on May 15.

The regularly scheduled April 28 meeting opened with Titus leading the association board in a moment of silence for Director Bob Prior, who served on the association board for a record 61 years and passed away April 12, just shy of his 93rd birthday.

Later in the meeting, the board took up a brief conversation on how to honor Prior, a U.S. Army veteran and accomplished lawyer and rancher, who first joined the board in 1961 and served until his death. Directors proposed naming the grandstand lift or the livestock scale after Prior — noting he'd purchased both — and ultimately appointed Directors Lawrence Dwight, Johana Rodoni and Jack Rice to an ad-hoc committee to return with a proposal.

Titus noted a memorial service is scheduled for Prior from 1 to 3 p.m. on May 3 at the Ingomar Club in Eureka.

When it came time for the Racing Committee's report, Gomes praised Titus, saying he did an "excellent job" presenting to the CHRB in April, noting he "earned a lot of respect in the room."

"Hopefully, we can carry that respect over to next month, when we go back May 15 and try to get these dates," Gomes said.

While horse racing has been part of the Humboldt County Fair for 128 years, its status at this year's fair has been shrouded in uncertainty since early this year, when the California Authority of Racing Fairs, the joint powers authority that has traditionally helped the fair with the logistics and financing of putting on race meets, announced it would not be pursuing race dates for any fairs this year and was on the brink of fiscal insolvency.

That decision — and the preceding collapse of Golden State Racing, an entity CARF created to fill the void left by the closure of Golden Gate Fields in Alameda County — has reverberated throughout Northern California. At present, it appears not a single fair — or any other entity, for that matter — will hold horse races in Northern California this year, with most fairs having voted to forgo even trying without CARF's support.

While the Humboldt County Fair Association (HCFA) has yet to make an official decision on whether to hold meets, the board has approved pursuing dates, kicking a final decision on racing down the proverbial road.

Some on the board have been vocal in their belief that racing is not just an institution at the soon-to-be 129-year-old fair, but that it's also an economic driver, even if the fair's financial records don't show it. Specifically, they argue that racing is one of the annual event's largest drivers of attendance, with a multiplier effect that boosts parking, carnival, concession and bar revenue, though the association has never been able to quantify that.

But without CARF in the picture this year, some have also expressed a fear that putting on race meets will be expensive and financially risky. Titus said in February he was scared "of not having horse racing and the fair going down," and of "having horse racing and the cost of it bringing the fair down."

The stakes of the decision may be the future of the fair itself. A financial report presented to the board April 28 shows the association has a balance of $460,000 in its accounts — enough to last about two months without an additional influx of funds — meaning it needs to turn a substantial profit at this year's event to carry into 2026. (An agenda item on purchasing an ice-skating rink fair staff hopes will diversify the association's revenue streams and that staff projects could bring in $26,000 in its first year and $115,000 in subsequent years was also tabled April 28 until racing decisions are finalized.)

Some clarity has come in recent weeks about how the association hopes to pull off hosting racing meets if ultimately given dates and a license from the CHRB, as well as approval from the association board. At the April CHRB meeting, Titus said the association will be partnering with Bernal Park Racing, LLC, recently launched by longtime racehorse owner George Schmitt and owner/breeder John Harris to replace CARF. Schmitt told the board at the meeting the outfit would supply full financial backing and provide the equipment and staff needed to race in Ferndale in August. But the three board members who ultimately didn't support HCFA's application each said they felt the proposal lacked a concrete business plan.

Gomes told the association board April 28 that his committee would be working with Bernal Park Racing to put together such a plan, as well as a contract between the association and the LLC. Exactly what that will look like is unclear, however, as neither a draft plan or contract have been reviewed by the full association board or even the Racing Committee.

"We're working to get something on paper," Gomes told the association board.

"We know exactly what we expect from him and [what] he expects from us. On the financial side, like I said, we're guaranteeing his money back for the purses. That has to be on paper, as well as a business plan."

Guaranteeing purses for the races could pose a significant financial risk for the association, making it potentially liable for hundreds of thousands of dollars, though that's unclear, as the proposed terms of such a contract have not been made public.

Nonetheless, Gomes made clear the Racing Committee is charging forward, trying to deliver what CHRB members want to see and gather a show of support from horse owners and trainers, elected officials and the community. "We're trying to get anyone and everybody."

Even with its ducks firmly in a row, HCFA may face an uphill battle getting the needed votes. Currently, the CHRB has a vacant seat, with only six seated members, three of who opposed HCFA's application last month, with two supporting it and another member absent. That means that to succeed May 15, HCFA will have to sway one of the board members who voted against it in April, or hope that both the governor fills the vacancy before the May with someone who will support its application and that the board member absent in April votes to approve the application.

With the board having already heard from Gomes during the Racing Committee report, there wasn't much to say when an agenda item set to discuss the 2025 horse racing meet came up later in the meeting.

"You guys want to waste an hour of your life?" Titus asked the board wryly, noting the subject of race meets had been discussed repeatedly for months.

"We'll save that for the good news in May," Gomes responded.

In other matters, HCFA CEO Moira Kenny offered a brief update on the association's efforts to get exemptions from the state to its prohibition on dairy and poultry shows due to the avian flu outbreak. She said the association has applied to for exemptions that would allow it to hold the shows 14 days before or after the fair, but has yet to hear back.

A member of the board asked if any fairs have been granted exemptions in the state to date, to which Kenny responded simply, "No."

"Even fairs seeking to hold one 14 days prior or after have been denied," she said.

Humboldt County's Juvenile Detention Center incorporates new garden program

By Anne To

anne@northcoastjournal.com

From lettuce to berries to garlic and parsley, vegetables color the blacktop at the Humboldt County Juvenile Detention Center as part of a garden project that started with a single chef.

Beth Bailey, who has been cooking at the juvenile hall for more than 10 years, started the garden as the capstone project for her fellowship with the Chef Ann Foundation, a nonprofit promoting scratch cooking in schools.

"When they built the new juvenile hall facility, they had plans to put a greenhouse in one of the rec yards. So, I worked with the division director at the time, Ray Watson, to ... brainstorm ideas about what we could do," Bailey says. "But because it's the county and everything takes so long, the greenhouse was kind of taking a long time. So, I talked to him about it like, 'I've got this grant that we could do. Why don't we do a little garden project? At least we can get something going.'"

While the Chef Ann Foundation fellowship program originally focused on encouraging scratch cooking in schools, Bailey became the first in the program to work at a juvenile hall, which qualified because it implements a federal youth nutrition program. Laura Smith, chief program officer at the Chef Ann Foundation, described Bailey's role in the fellowship as a "unique scenario."

"It was kind of a 'Oh, we hadn't thought of that,'" Smith says. "[Bailey] explained to us that they essentially have a school program on site that is a part of their facility, and she had a lot of really great explanations about the crossover that she envisioned, and that her leadership envisioned, to ensure that the students at their facility were also benefiting from some of the same things you would find at a traditional school district."

According Humboldt County Probation Juvenile Corrections Division Director Dayna Wilcox, the new 30-bed juvenile hall facility in Eureka has an average daily population of 10, ages 12 through 25. (The majority housed there are ages 12 through 17.)

Bailey used the $5,000 grant accompanying the fellowship to build four raised garden beds on wheels and purchase gardening supplies. While some youth at the facility helped out with planting in the garden, their role has so far mostly been limited to taste-testing fresh crops and new recipes. Bailey envisions their taking a more active role moving forward, though.

"We were talking about maybe making our own hot sauce," Bailey says. "The kids really like hot peppers and like spicy food. ... So, I think it'd be really fun to grow some hot peppers and have our own, like, juvie hot sauce."

While Bailey oversees much of the garden, she also receives assistance from Facility Manager Jason Beam and chef Chris Olsen. She has also consulted with Jesse Alm, the Humboldt County Office of Education's school garden coordinator, for advice on what to plant.

As part of her capstone project, Bailey also replaced four of what she calls "heat-and-eat" dishes with made-from-scratch recipes, pointing to salsa, which used to come canned but is now freshly made, as one example.

"About once a week, we have something where we incorporate like a main dish that uses our garden produce but we [also] serve a salad every single day at lunch," Bailey says. "Maybe we don't use everything from the garden to make the salad [but] we can sprinkle in what we have. [If] we have kale that's fresh and ready to go right now, put that in the salad, for sure ... So, we use the garden all the time."

The juvenile hall also participates in the CalFresh Harvest of the Month program, in which a different local produce item is highlighted every month and sent to participating facilities for youth to sample. Bailey uses it as an opportunity to try new recipes and expose the children and young adults within the juvenile hall to something new.

Bailey says the exposure itself is important, even if they don't like it, noting that at least after they are released and see it again, they're not going to go, "Oh, what is that?"

"It's like, 'Oh, that's kale. I've had that before,'" she says.

While not everything is made-from-scratch, Bailey says about 80 percent of the juvenile hall's monthly menu is. She added that she tries to include new recipes or provide simple alternatives to high-processed meals like cereal by serving dishes like overnight oats instead.

Beam says that by incorporating alternative dishes to processed meals, the youths can learn that they can get a healthy meal without it being complicated and expensive.

"We have a lot of independent living skill classes that kind of parallel that, so they can learn and understand it, and kind of break the mindset of, 'Wait till pay-day, I'm going to buy wings. I'm going to buy a pizza,' and then [the money is] gone by Tuesday," Beam says. "So, to get them to understand that 'I can have this really high-quality stuff' [by] just changing their mindset and having them prepare. They see what comes out of [our kitchen] and they eat it, and it really opens their mind to what they can do."

Meenal Rana, a child development professor at Cal Poly Humboldt, says she participated in the Good Food Project in Michigan, which conducted focus groups in three different counties looking at children and their food choices.

"Some of the things we learned were that there were some children who have never seen a kiwi in their life, for example ... so, they didn't want to try it," Rana says. "I think it's important that there is early exposure to what kinds of vegetables and what kinds of fruits we have available in the area."

Beam says many of the children who come into the juvenile detention center come from households with food insecurity, noting some have their first made-from-scratch meal at the juvenile hall.

According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, as of 2023, approximately 47.4 million Americans had lived in food-insecure households, and 7.2 million children had lived in food-insecure households.

The Chef Ann Foundation also reported that one in eight households with children can't afford to buy enough food for the family. According to Feeding America, a nationwide collective of food banks, there was a 20-percent child food insecurity rate in Humboldt County in 2017, where 17 percent of the population lives below the federal poverty line, according to the U.S. Census.

"Another thing we learned [in the Good Food Project] was that healthy food doesn't have to be expensive," Rana says, adding that the perception of cost, however, is often a barrier.

She spoke of a mother in one of the focus groups who questioned the point of buying a bag of apples that are perishable to feed her children when processed food is cheap, accessible and doesn't spoil. Rana says that having access to healthy meals in schools allows children from food-insecure families to get important nutrition, regardless of what is or isn't being served at home.

"I think it's important to keep in mind when we talk about food sustainability, not only is it good and organic, is it accessible economically to people?" Rana says. "It's an equity issue when we are talking about that. It should be part of the school system because it is likely that if we have those healthy options in school, where children spend a lot of their time, every child will have access to healthy food regardless of their home background, regardless of their income level."

Meenal says access to healthy and nutritional foods is essential to the development of children and teens, especially when it comes to their hormones.

"Hormones are a big part of food. That could be detrimental to young children's bodies," Rana says. "Their brain is developing at this time. [The] brain requires nutrition ... all the parts of our bodies,

A 2022 study led by Jacqueline Vernarelli, associate professor and master of public health program director at Sacred Heart University, found that children between the ages of 3 and 5 who consumed more ultra-processed foods had less locomotor skill than their peers. The study also found that youths between the ages of 12 and 15 who consumed more ultra-processed foods demonstrated lower cardiovascular fitness.

Lisvany Ortega, executive chef at Havana in Arcata.

At Havana, Bittersweet Memories of Cuba

By Maryanne Casas-Perez
onthetable@northcoastjournal.com

During a busy lunch rush at Havana, a Cuban restaurant in Arcata, Executive Chef Lisvany Ortega sat at a small wooden table, the pulse of salsa music echoing in the background. Between bursts of activity from the kitchen, he shared the story of how he journeyed from Old Havana to this quiet corner of Northern California.

Ortega began working in the restaurant industry at 17, hopping from kitchen to kitchen in Cuba before making his way to Mexico, then Miami and finally landing in California. It was a longtime friend and fellow Havana native who invited him to join the staff at Havana restaurant.

"Everyone is leaving Cuba," Ortega said. "Because there are no opportunities, there is no security. Over there, if you want to open a business like this one, you do it, and every day you wake up and go to sleep with the fear that they will knock on your door and take your business."

Ortega explained that maintaining a business in Cuba is difficult. There is a cap on how much money a proprietor can earn, and that limit can change overnight. If a business does too well, the Cuban government often imposes additional fees and taxes that ultimately force it to close. People are rarely given a reason; it just happens.

While Ortega lived through the daily struggle of working in Cuba's unstable restaurant industry, Shona Baum, a co-owner of Havana restaurant, witnessed the country's unraveling from the perspective of an American running a business in its capital. She and William González Martí co-owned a restaurant called California Cafe in Cuba, where chefs fused Cuban and American cuisine. After a few years, they had to close the business due to the change in economy.

Baum first visited Cuba during the Obama era in 2015. She spent five years living there, running the restaurant and witnessing firsthand the island's rapid political and economic deterioration. "Once Trump became president, within less than a year there were a lot of political and economic problems that made it much harder to run a restaurant," Baum said.

After Fidel Castro's death in 2016, leadership passed to his brother Raúl Castro. Then in 2018, Miguel Díaz-Canel became president. This transition sparked early hopes for reform that, according to Baum, quickly faded. "Everyone thought he would be better and more change-oriented, but they just kept doing more and more repressive things," she said.

Díaz-Canel did expand private business opportunities in Cuba, allowing people to own small businesses. However, these ventures remained tightly controlled by the government. There are no free markets or franchise opportunities, and the imposition of high taxes and fees continued.

These restrictive government actions made it hard for small businesses to survive. The economy became extremely cash oriented and people often waited in line for hours at the bank, only to find that the bank had run out of hard currency.

In 2017, Trump announced plans to restrict the "people-to-people" travel licenses that encouraged contact between citizens of the two countries. People-to-people licenses allowed Americans to legally visit Cuba, as long as they spent their time interacting directly with Cuban society through educational and cultural activities, not just leisure tourism. Closing this avenue greatly slowed tourism in Cuba. The lack of American tourists deeply affected the economy, especially for businesses like California Cafe that served a wide variety of travelers.

"Then COVID hit and everything was squashed," Baum said.

To join the International Monetary Fund, Cuba had to adopt a single currency when the pandemic hit. In January of 2021, Cuba ended its dual-currency system, unifying the Cuban peso (CUP) as the sole currency and eliminating the convertible peso (CUC). While intended to simplify the economy, the move triggered inflation and hardship due to sudden price increases.

"When I would go down to visit, the currency plummeted," Baum said, offering the example that a sandwich that had once cost $10 was now only $3.

The shift to the moneda nacional, or national currency, caused logistical chaos. The CUP, which had previously traded at 23-25 pesos per dollar, had fallen to 4,000 pesos per dollar. When foreign visitors paid in dollars, the conversion was so extreme that some items would cost only pennies, so making change became nearly impossible.

Ortega's eyes welled with tears as he spoke about Cuba. He says he misses his family and his homeland, but recognizes the lack of opportunity there. "The politics and more the things that have happened in Cuba, the communism. You cannot say anything that they don't like because they jail you, it's all bad and they do it without right," Ortega said.

Both Ortega and Baum shared that there is no credible journalism in Cuba because the government does not allow it. Even on the internet, it is difficult to find verifiable news about the country, as independent journalism does not thrive there. Ortega said that government-approved tourist guides only show visitors what the regime wants them to see, painting a misleading picture of Cuban life.

"They have done away with beautiful Cuba ... the more the years pass, the more it collapses," Ortega said.

Though his heart aches for Cuba, Ortega finds peace in his new routine — crafting dishes like arroz con pollo that remind him of his mother and his early cooking days in Havana. Now, he serves them in another community, thousands of miles away.

This column begins on May 1, International Worker's Day in most of the world. But we don't celebrate that here because it simply isn't allowed in the curdling nexus of industry and finance we call home. This isn't by accident but rather design, as our nation's relationship with labor oscillates between revulsion and fantasy. We lionize the importance of hard work, while our leaders do everything they can to devalue that labor by paying bottom dollar for it and generally mocking those who can't escape the birth-trap of blue collar slobdom. That a country built on slavery, then exploitative immigrant labor, one that has done everything it can to kill off workers movements and class realism, has any sort of nod towards unionization and the collective value of labor should be considered a miracle, if it wasn't paid for dearly with the blood and bodies of millions who rose in defiance of capitalist aristocracy. The days of strikes and street fights to gain our rights are the stuff of myth now, inherited by living people who have no tactile memories of the battle. Even Labor Day has no sense of its origin for us, instead marking a long weekend to enjoy the fading summer or — even more bougie — the marker for when it's no longer fashionable to wear white to gatherings no one you know, or ever will know, attends in distant mirages of opulence. The Democrats, once sort of the party of labor, have punched so hard against its power for so long that we have now gotten the government they so dearly worked for: rich autocrats busy dismantling what was left of a social state. We have a reactionary working class terrified of being othered into losing what little it has left, and a hungry black hole in power that happens when the state fully merges with the corporate and financial sector. I have seen protest signs around here marking the death of American Democracy — as if we ever had one of those — when instead they should be marking the obsolescence of the Democrats, who have achieved their "Third Way" goal of destroying any popular grassroots leftist movements. This is the age of the Republican "victory," when the most wealthy, shameless and stupid thieves have ascended to the glorious position of holding the bag while the last coins get squeezed out of the majority of America, and we can finally kill off the illusion of being anything other than slaves and bloodbags for the wealthy few.

It doesn't have to be like this, though. Someone has to grow the food, build homes, keep the lights on, take out the trash, maintain our roads and water systems, and deliver the mail. And the assholes in charge ain't gonna do it. We just have to fight them instead of each other. And there are A LOT more of us. Never forget that. And have a good week.

Thursday

The Miniplex is hosting a very special breed of power trio tonight at 7:30 p.m., a punk and free jazz outfit called mssv, which stands for Main Steam Stop Valve. Mike Watt from outsider punk pioneers the Minutemen joins with guitarist Mike Baggetta and drummer Stephen Hodges, who has beaten the skins for artists like Tom Waits and the late David Lynch. A COVID-era project, the group is making up for lost touring opportunities due to the virus, rolling through town near the end of a two-month-long tour in support of its latest release from early March, On and On. This should be a good draw, so try to catch an advance ticket for $16, or pay $4 more at the door if there are any left the night of, a risky calculation.

Friday

Back at it again at the Miniplex tonight at 8 p.m., this time for an evening of experimental electronic music, with two touring acts that feature live drums and bespoke visuals. Portland's BL_ank is rolling through the West Coast with Spanish sound manipulator Alex Silva, who is now based in Baltimore. This should be a real good time together for all fans of the outer spaces of sound and vision, with excellent local support from long-time musical mega-brain Hudson Glover and the always superb Elegant Humanoid ($10).

True North Duo plays the Arcata Playhouse on Saturday, May 3, at 7 p.m.

Submitted

Saturday

True North Duo are Kristen Grainger and Dan Wetzel, who together have crafted a sound built of the finest aspects of bluegrass, pulling off large feats of instrumental prowess and vocal intensity that break containment from the usual restrictions of a less populated act in this genre of music. You can enjoy that sound this evening at 7 p.m. for $20 at the Arcata Playhouse, a perfect venue that makes miracles happen with this kind of music.

If it's another kind of music you are looking for, with a younger demographic and a big beat, wait an hour later and the Arcata Theatre Lounge has you covered, where Reno, Nevada's hip hop wunderkind Lou Deezi will be doing what he does best online, having come up quickly in public eye through the arena of social media despite being barely at the end of his teens. He is joined by 1100 Himself and Mitchell, with support from Jelo and Young Johana ($30).

Sunday

Speaking of Reno, Nevada, experimental emo act Antiprono enjoys its second night in the area, having played Redwood Retro is Arcata at 7 p.m. last night. Tonight the band will be at Savage Henry Comedy Club at the same time, and for the same price, $5-$20 sliding scale. However, the line-up will be slightly different, retaining "satanic jazz" act Victor Shrines from Portland, Oregon, but adding Southern California metal band Meridian Parkway and local bangers Image Pit. The show is all-ages, so bring an ID if you want a beer.

Monday

The Basement has a rare Monday night gig going down at 7:30 p.m., with comedian Steve Hofstetter, famous on YouTube for his crowd work, particularly with hecklers, on the bill. However, as of press time the show appears to be mostly sold-out, with the exception of a few front row, meet-and-greet tickets left going for $162.96 after fees, so you are forgiven if you stay home and have a gander on the web instead.

Tuesday

Back over to Savage Henry tonight for a show called Suspended Animation, where local comedians watch Saturday morning cartoons and riff on the absurdities of old youthful diversions. If watching this material at 9 p.m. seems a little off-putting to you, you can drown the eeriness of nostalgia with milk and cereal, available for free after you pony up the $5 entrance fee.

Wednesday

I Speak Machine is a Los Angeles duo which synthesizes experimental film with sound and performance, and has toured with Gary Numan, a titanic figure in the development of that sort of thing. Tonight at 7:30 p.m. at the Miniplex, they will be performing with support by DJ Ring Entity and a local band called Parking Structure, which must be a futuristic act because we don't have any of those around here, but will probably need them. $15 gives you access to the wonder. ●

NCJ WHAT'S GOOD

Bloody Havoc

By John J. Bennett

screens@northcoastjournal.com

HAVOC. The most linear, lowest resistance path to Gareth Evans' latest is most likely an accidental one. Dropped uncere- moniously onto Netflix, where algorithmic manipulation, more than fandom or genu- ine interest, is intended to steer traffic its way, Havoc would hardly seem positioned for lasting — even fleeting, viral — suc- cess. Casual Tom Hardy fans might wander over, further compelled by the presence of Timothy Olyphant and Forrest Whitaker, but I can't help but wonder how many of them will be put-off by what turns out to be a bone-shattering, blood-drenched, wintry shoot-em-up set against the underbelly of an unnamed American city's Chinatown. And that wouldn't be a prob- lem, per se, except that this is a movie for which some of us have been waiting for a very long time and which, either in its execution or its delivery system, may not be getting the treatment it deserves.

To backtrack to something like a logical starting point, Gareth Evans is a Welsh writer/director who, while living in Jakarta, kind of irrevocably changed international action cinema by making The Raid: Re- demption (2011) which, along with its 2014 sequel, minted Iko Uwais as a genuine star and opened a lot of intercontinental eyes to possibilities previously unseen in fight films. Evans subsequently shifted gears, got into bed with Netflix and made Apos- tle (2018), which I can't remember seeing, if I did; shame on me.

Somewhere in the doldrum day of the mid-pandemic, though, rumors surfaced that Evans was at work on an action movie with Hardy as its star. (This was around the time Hardy started dropping into and winning jiu jitsu competitions.) It was a source of hope in an unhelpful time. But for almost half a decade, the project lingered like a ghost on IMDb pages, taunting us with the possibility of something fresh and new and horrible and violent. And then, wraith-like, it appeared. No fanfare to speak of, very little promotion, though I suppose I hadn't been looking for it. But there it was among the Hot Frostys and assorted costume dramas, big as life but disquietingly quiet in its arrival.

Cursory research indicates Havoc has been stuck in some new version of studio develop- ment hell, delayed by reshoots and strikes after having been principally photographed in 2021, with the current 800-pound gorilla finally having decided to grace us with its presence at this late, rather un- ceremonious date.

For those of us so long in anticipating it, we've gotten most of what we hoped for. The uninitiated will likely not be as pleased.

Hardy plays Walker, a taciturn, mut- tering homicide detective in high Hardy style, who we learn in the early going is estranged from his wife and young daugh- ter. We'll come to learn that Walker is also in the pocket of high-powered politician Lawrence Beaumont (Whitaker) and his former narcotics buddy turned heister Vincent (Olyphant). There's a purloined semi-truck loaded with washing machines (which are, in turn, loaded with cocaine, naturally), a deal gone terribly bad and a whole lot of blood and recriminations flying around.

One of the things so many of us love about The Raid is its almost-entire disre- gard for exposition (or, by one definition, of narrative storytelling). There's a little coloring in of the protagonist's inner life, but really the thing is a 100-minute fight festival, an opportunity for cast and crew to deploy every object in a high-rise as a weapon. It's a gleeful, cinematically deca- dent affair, choreographed and shot with equal precision, style and disregard for physical well-being.

Havoc delivers much of the same muscular, acrobatic fun, with even more assault rifles and chests erupting into fountains of gore. It is more of what we want, and with an occasional elevated flourish — the photography of the open- ing truck sequence, with its impossible boom and dolly shots, springs to mind — to let us know everyone is working with a bigger budget and newer tools. Taken as pure action, it is almost as satisfying as its own progenitors or something like John Wick (2014).

My cat when I return from vacation.

Havoc

But in attempting to personalize the narrative, to make Walker or any of the youths-in-trouble with whom he is ostensibly aligned into actual people, the pacing falters and we simply don't have enough emotional material with which to work. Set against the resounding success of Wick, with its fantastical world-building ridiculousness, Havoc stills feels compact and grimy — as it should — but gives us suggestions of a greater ambition that the finished product never quite reaches.

That sense of misplaced striving may only be a product of my own hopes for this movie, for Evans to again redraw the boundaries of cinematic violence; I should probably be happy that it is as good as it is. And in terms of late-night rewatchable durability, I suspect it will prove to be quite good indeed. TVMA. 107M. NETFLIX.

partnership allows HACE to work with businesses through the federal and state procurement solicitation process to allow fair and equal opportunities to support local contractors and service providers. Completing a service agreement allows us to work with your company without obligation on either parties' behalf and is only executed when HACE proposes a project and is accepted by your company based on your interest and availability. Please note that HACE typically has several contractors or service providers, in a single trade, on contract so that work may move forward even if a contractor or service provider is not available. Entering into a service contract does not guarantee work.

HACE is looking for the following contractors and service providers:

- Licensed Contractors
- General Contractors
 - Plumbers
 - Electricians
 - Painters (primarily interior with some exterior projects available for bid)
 - Roofers (for re-roofs and re-pairs)
 - Landscapers/lawn care

- Service Providers:
- Cleaning services (apartment finish cleaning and moveout cleaning)
 - Trash Haulers (clearing out apartments of trash, furniture, appliances, and debris)
 - Carpet Cleaning

Please note:

- All licensed contractors must have an active license, be bonded, have a $2,000,000 liability policy, and be in compliance with all California State License Board rules and regulations.
- All Services providers must have insurance and must comply with all federal, state, and local laws and regulations.
- A W-9 will be required in order for HACE to process payments.

If you are interested in working with the Housing Authority of the City of Eureka or have questions, please contact: Ryan Harvey, Maintenance Supervisor at (707) 443-4583 ext. 226 or ryanh@eurekahumboldtha.org northcoastjournal.com

CITY OF FORTUNA
NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING
NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the Fortuna Planning Commission will hold a public hearing on May 13, 2025, at 6:00 P.M. at City Hall, 621 11th Street in Fortuna, to evaluate the draft Fiscal Year (FY) 2025-2026 Capital Improvement Program (CIP) for General Plan (GP) consistency before City Council review and potential CIP adoption during the budget adoption process. The City's GP and CIP are the principal tools for planning and programming public infrastructure improvements. The GP includes goals and policies that address short—and long-term infrastructure needs. The CIP is a five-year expenditure plan that prioritizes and sets funding for infrastructure projects. CIP projects must be consistent with the GP's goals and policies. Each year, the Planning Commission reviews all new CIP projects planned, initiated, or to be constructed during the ensuing fiscal year for GP consistency, as required by Government Code Section 65401. The draft FY 2025-2026 CIP is available for review at the Community Development Department at City Hall, 621 11th Street, Monday through Thursday between 8:00 a.m. and 10:00 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. and 3:30 p.m. Public comment will be accepted at the meeting or via email to communitydevelopment@ci.fortuna.ca.us by 5 pm on Monday, May 12, 2025. Interested persons are invited to appear at the meeting to give oral or written testimony regarding this matter. Written comments may also be forwarded to the Community Development Department at 621 11th Street, Fortuna, California, 95540. Please contact the City Clerk's Office at (707) 725-7600 if you need special assistance to participate in this meeting. Notification 48 hours before the meeting will enable the City to make reasonable arrangements to ensure accessibility. (28 CFR 35.102 - 35.104 ADA Title II).

David Wayne Smith
August 12, 1943-April 17, 2025

David Wayne Smith, age 81, passed away on April 17, 2025, in Ferndale, California. He was born on August 12, 1943, in Albany, New York, to Albert A. Smith and Martha V. Welter, and was preceded in death by his parents and his sister, Carol E. Smith (Earl). David was formerly married to Deb Oliver. He had no children, but is survived by his nephew, Scotty Smith Jenkins.

David had a remarkable and diverse career. He was a NASA engineer and was involved in the Apollo program. Beyond his work with NASA, David also had a significant impact in the music industry as an audio engineer, collaborating with numerous iconic artists such as Billy Joel, Black Oak Arkansas, Lionel Richie, B.B. King, Ray Charles, Journey and so many more. Later in life, he also shared his love of music as a radio DJ, audio engineer, and program manager for KMUD in Humboldt County. David was also a natural inventor, always exploring new ideas.

In his leisure time, David enjoyed soaking up the California sunshine and loved getting a good tan and cruising in his convertible. David will be remembered for his brilliant mind, his passion for music and innovation, and his kindness towards others. Though a private man, he was always supportive and shared his knowledge generously with those around him. There will be no formal services held.

Alice Herman
1931-2025

Alice Page Herman passed away peacefully on April 3rd, 2025. Born in Salinas, California on February 9th, 1931, she was the youngest of three girls born to Cecil and Ethel Page. She graduated from San Jose State University before marrying and moving to Fortuna. She was a teacher at Ambrosini Elementary for several years before buying Quality Hardware with her husband.

Alice is survived by her three sons, Ben Herman, Tim Herman, Craig (Melinda) Herman, grandchildren Alicia (Ryan) Williams, Tyler Herman, Brett Herman, and great grandchildren, Keely Harris, Colton Williams, Caraline and Jack Herman.

Alice enjoyed being active and spent many years volunteering as a Pink Lady at Redwood Memorial Hospital. She spent time at the Fortuna Senior Center, attended the Fortuna Methodist Church, and had many friends. She lived in her own home, with assistance from Ben, up until the last few months. Despite some health issues, she maintained a positive attitude and never complained. Alice will be remembered for her friendly smile, warm and welcoming spirit, and the kindness she showed others.

A special thank you to PACE, Fortuna Rehab Center and Hospice of Humboldt.
